John Shore is a Kentucky-based magician and theatrical performer with more than four decades of stage experience. His work ranges from intimate close-up, strolling and banquet events to full-evening stage presentations. These performances emphasize a deep respect for the relationship that exists between performer and the audience. His professional work draws heavily from both strikingly original material and the historical traditions of classical magic, often combining magic with elements of mystery, history, theater, and a strong sense of humor.

For many years, Shore produced and performed The Kentucky Magic Dinner Theater, a one-man evening of original and classical magic presented in Lexington, Kentucky. This production accumulated more than one hundred performances. His other work has included self-produced magic events for the public, corporate events, weddings, fundraising events, dinner shows, tourism-based productions, fringe festivals, and magic-centered variety programs in Chicago and Indianapolis. Other projects include creation of a tourism-based dinner show called The RJ Corman Magic Dinner Train, a historical program about Victorian seances called The Talking Dead, and A Taste of Magic & Bourbon, a program combining magic with Kentucky bourbon history and tasting developed in partnership with a Kentucky bus tour company.

Shore continues to perform for both public and private audiences. Artistically, his approach is grounded in the belief that magic works best when the audience is not simply watching tricks, but participating in a shared theatrical experience.
